

Wind Properties Hails Successful Exhibitions

Wind Properties has capped a busy week, which included two major exhibitions in London and Dubai.

Sahel Nazari (R), Sales & Marketing Manager, Wind Properties in London

With respect to the London exhibition, Wind Properties' Sales & Marketing Manager, Sahel Nazari stated "I was impressed with the reception as there were many interested visitors keen to travel to Dubai in the near future to visit our offices". He added, "It was a good opportunity to meet some of our foreign clients, residing in Europe, and at the same time reach out to new clients, especially with the exciting prospect of an imminent launch in Dubailand in the near future".

Whilst expressing his satisfaction with the venue and the show itself, Nazari commented that there was lots of scope to improve and expand the venue in the future. He said, "The hall and show was on a much smaller scale than the ones that we are used to in Dubai, shows such as Cityscape and Home Owner, but as this was the first such show in London, it's a good start. I think there were 30 or so real estates and developers from Dubai this time around. I am sure we can double or treble it next time".

Wind and Polycor officials meeting

Polycor Inc., the leading natural stone solution in North America, with close to $60 million worth of sales under its belt at the end of the last financial year, met with Wind International officials last week, updating them with the progress of activities and the upcoming schedule for Wind Tower I & II's marbles and stones.

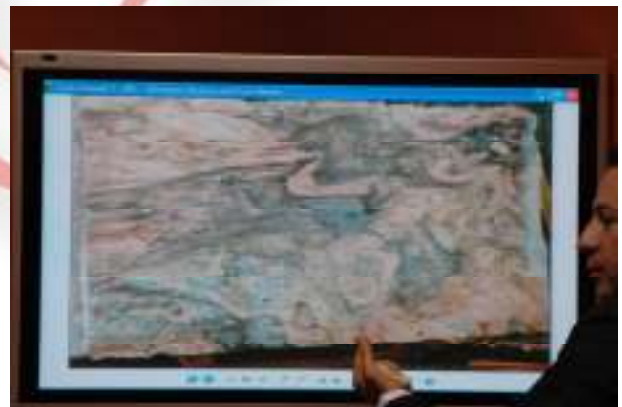

During the meeting, Polycor's representative showcased the company's proposals for both towers. Preliminary decisions indicate favoritism towards combining flamed, polished and honed stones. White Georgian and Black Cambrian stones were among the Wind officials' favorites to be chosen for the lobby of both towers.
